Alternative Payment Models: The Good, Bad, and Ugly from an Operational, Compliance, and Valuation Perspective

Among other experienced leaders in the healthcare industry, PYA was featured at the American College of Healthcare Executives (ACHE) Congress on Healthcare Leadership March 26–29, 2018, in Chicago, IL. PYA Principals Angie Caldwell and Martie Ross co-presented a seminar, “Alternative Payment Models: The Good, Bad, and Ugly from an Operational, Compliance, and Valuation Perspective,” along with Earl Anderson, Executive Director of Tennessee Orthopaedic Clinic, PC.

The seminar addressed alternative payment models (APMs) and how their evolution is a catalyst for innovation and change within the healthcare delivery system. With an industry goal of improving healthcare quality and payment outcomes while reducing total costs of care, payers are increasingly promoting the use of APMs, which compensate providers based on the value of care they deliver, rather than the volume of services performed. Caldwell, Ross, and Anderson shared real-world case-study examples to illustrate the good, bad, and ugly with respect to operationalizing, administering, and valuing APMs, within a framework of compliance.

The seminar helped attendees:

- Recognize the challenges and benefits of APMs.
- Employ the knowledge gained to administer APMs compliantly and in consideration of fair market value.
